

Counties with local eye care but far from an academic center are not worse off

The comparison requested in peer review: local ophthalmologist supply crossed with academic proximity

The vertical contrast (academic proximity) is small and favors the near-academic group only slightly. The horizontal contrast (having any local ophthalmologist) is larger, and in the direction expected of greater diagnostic intensity.